Multinational
A multinational company, unlike an international one, has investments in other countries. It has business, staff, and premises in more than one country.

However, it does not have coordinated product offerings. A multinational company focuses more on adapting its products and services to individual local markets.

Global
A global company has investments and is present in several countries. It markets its goods or services through the use of an identical coordinated image/brand in every market.

In most cases, there is one corporate office that is responsible for worldwide strategy. There is also a strong emphasis on cost management, efficiency, and volume.

Transnational
A transnational company operates in different countries. It has investments in operations both at home and abroad. However, the directors/managers at each individual market are also the decision-makers for their regions.

Additionally, local management decides on R&D and marketing policies and strategies for their territories. R&D stands for Research and Development.
